

Pope: Ecological challenge of our time is more urgent than ever!

Christians cannot resign ourselves to a culture of waste. He noted how today we are, on the one hand, “witnessing the uncontrolled consumption of resources; on the other, the management and disposal of enormous quantities of waste are becoming increasingly problematic.”

He called for changing how we act in order to create a system capable of preserving the resources of our planet and insisted that “mindful of God’s commandment, as Christians, we cannot resign ourselves to accepting a culture of waste.”

“Rather, we are called to make wise use of creation,” the Pope emphasized. “As Pope Francis taught, the model of recycling and circular production represents a good way to ensure a sustainable environment for future generations,” he continued, while calling the Church to “set an example of consistency” and “be the first to put into practice what she herself proclaims.”
